

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy act.

Prior to Indiana law our business, home and elderly relatives were continually harassed by telemarketers.

The FCC would be wise to implement a strong nationwide standard similar to Indiana's.

At the minimum, they should allow the states to set their own more stringent requirements beyond the federal code, and not preempt existing law.